Lord Raglan and the Weather.

From the Lowlon Times. Lord Ragian might in September have taken Sebastopel duly and truly; But the weather (he raves about weather!) w And he wished to take it-cooly !

So he made what was, indeed to our focs, A diversion; quoth he, " I'll con it Awhile, and in the meantime keep My weather-eye upon it."

October, November, December came on, As if missioned his army to kill off: The weather is now too cold," quoth he, "I'll take it—with the chill off !" For three months more despatches he wrote

In the meteorological form, Till the storm had passed; "Tis too late now, Quoth he, "to take it-by storm !"

Thus, whether the weather be foul or fair, Sebastopol 'scapes the blow-Then, down with the weatherglass!—give us a mar Who will take it—whether or no!

LITERATURE,

Pulling the wrong Bell.

I have heard a story of bell pulling, which as many of my readers may be ignorant of, and the passengers gave him a coin, with an air as it is worthy of telling, also being myself in which said, their is no help for it, you have a gossipping mood, I will even out with it. A fine steamer, of the largest class, was plowing her way down stream with a 'full head'

The time was early morning; the sun had not yet cooled his fiery beams in the murkey waters of the Mississippi; few of the passengers were astir; and the boat, quiet and still, save the regular scream from her iron throat was making fine headway. Suddenly the engineer's bell gave a furious allarming summons, which being translated into the direction of my pocket-not for money the vernacular, ment- Slow her !

The man at the steam obeyed the mandate, and with his hand upon the lever, waited anxiously the next call.

It soon came, and louder yet, "Stop her !" " Some trouble ahead," thought the engineer; but hardly had the idea passed through countered; but for the little, mean, conhis mind, when the busy bell again pealed temptible reason, that I was ashamed to be " Back her !" Steam was let on in an instance, and seizing the lever, the man commenced working the engine by hand; but the wheel had not yet completed the first retrogade revolution, when a louder tintinabulation tinkled out succes-

Now this backing and fixing and fixing had excited the attention of officers and crew; and as the pilot and engineer having obtained relief met halfway down on the "boiler deck," captain and clerk, mate and stewart, bar-keeper and chambermaid all hasten to the post of observation, and ere the two combatants could join issue, they were seized and held, and an
